Natural sounds — waves, wind, bird songs — are so —41— that companies sell tapes of them to —42— people seeking a relaxing —43— in their homes or cars. One reason why environmental sounds are big —44— is the fact that ordinary citizens, especially city dwellers, are —45— by noise pollution. On the way to work, on the job, and on the way home, the typical —46— resident must cope with a continuing barrage of unpleasant sounds.

The noise level in an office can be unbearable. From the beginning of the working day till closing, phones ring, typewriters clack and clatter, clocks —47—, intercoms buzz and Xerox —48— thumb back and forth. Every time the managers can't find people, they resort to a nerve-shattering public address —49—. Because managers worry about employees' —50—, they graciously provide the endless droning of canned music. This effectively eliminates any possibility of a moment of blessed silence.
